Quality and Access Over Quantity in TVET, Report: this preliminary report, prepared as part of the UNDP Nepal's Support to Knowledge and Life-long Learning Skills (SKILLS) Programme, was presented to development partners this week. The report found that current provisions of technical and vocational education and training (TVET) programmes in Nepal are largely uncoordinated and unplanned, and are being provided without giving due thought to the relevance of the skills gained to the trainees and the community where they live, as well as to employment prospects overall. They also found that most programmes were also concentrated in urban areas, rendering access limited for people from rural parts of the country.
